King Charles III Birthday Celebration

It was a proud day - people flocked to the King's Birthday Parade opposite Government House on West Bay Road. Prominent members of the public were there.

Accessible healthcare needed for all

By Lindsey Turnbull

Speaking at this year's Cardiovascular Conference organised by Cayman Heart Fund held last week at the Kimpton Seafire, Chief Medical Officer Dr Nick Gent spoke to the theme of 'Improving Cardiovascular Health for All' and said that it was vitally important that everyone in Cayman had access to adequate healthcare, not just the wealthiest.

"...we have a society, that, whilst superficially wealthy, has marked divisions, and we must help those that are most disadvantaged by poverty, or the way our insurance and health care systems work, to manage diseases that will affect their future cardiovascular health," he said.

Talking on the state of cardiovascular health today. Dr Gent elaborated:

"...before we congratulate ourselves, the Cayman Islands being an apparently affluent country, we should also look at the fallacies underlying the superficial concept that we should, being apparently rich, at least by international standards, therefore, be healthy too. The fallacy is, of course, that societies are heterogeneous, and within our population there are significant elements of low, and middle income groups, together with people of wealth," he said.

He went on to explain that various indexes which measure the evenness of distribution of wealth amongst a country's population and which measure the movement of wealth from rich to poor within that country suggested that the low income population of the Cayman Islands was "of a significant size".

"I observe that we have a general appearance of a middle income, or even a wealthy society," he said. "The investment and development that we see in the Cayman Islands brings with it those things that eliminate the premature causes of death that we see in the poorest societies, such as clean water, sanitation, and immunisation. And these are a relatively universal benefit to most of the population of the Cayman Islands. But poverty is also significant in the Cayman Islands, and affects a surprisingly large proportion of the population."

Dr Gent said that this produced a strange mix of middle income and wealthy people who will worry most about dying of cancer, and a large group of the population whose health experience may be more equivalent to lower income societies, and their propensity to suffer, and die, from cardiovascular disease.

He went on to talk about the "ingrained nature of this risk", detailing statistics that revealed 70% of people were overweight and 33% obese.

"...when we summarise risk factors, such as smoking, diet, physical activity, weight, and hypertension, we see that 24% of 18 to 44 year olds have three or more risk factors for heart disease, rising to 47% in people aged 45 to 69 years," he cautioned.

Dr Gent said that Cayman therefore was a society, whilst it could be assumed universally benefited from its apparent wealth, in practice it was very divided and the life chances of many were seriously impaired.

The divide in society was further exacerbated by issues of access to health care, he believed, in particular, the unintended consequences of the structure of Cayman's insurance system, which was weighted towards secondary and tertiary care and the inevitable development of a health care service system dominated by secondary and tertiary health care, which he called a "self-fulfilling prophecy."

"Worryingly, primary health care services, devoted to chronic disease management, are, for many, not accessible and not affordable. Nor have we explored how such care services can be made affordable," he stated.

As an example, he spoke about the way in which a person with symptoms of hypertension (high blood pressure) had to undergo 24-hour blood pressure recording, a number of blood tests, and an ECG that would easily exceed the insurance allowance and be unaffordable even before potential treatment costs were taken into account. He then worried about whether the care plan for treatment ever took the patient's ability to pay into consideration.

"I believe that it is not beyond our wit to devise low-cost investigational plans and cost effective care pathways for the most important predeterminants of future debilitating disease - diabetes and hypertension," he said. "Not forgetting that even affordable care will not deliver a healthier population unless it is accessible care."

He called for new delivery models using a wider range of clinicians. To that end, he said he was pleased to see how well supported the fledgling resuscitation council for the Cayman Islands was progressing.

"We aim to standardise and regulate training and accreditation. To build on the excellent work of local charities to build first responder networks equipped with automated defibrillators. Integrate the response of those first responders with the standing health care and emergency services, and both give the best resuscitative care at the scene of an acute cardiac event, and reduce the time from onset of such an event to definitive revascularisation intervention," he confirmed.

The resuscitation council would be a forum to fit these pieces together, he said.

Dr Gent ended his presentation by stating that Cayman needed to realise that some care services could not be left to market forces as they required the planning and partnership of a range of people from volunteer backgrounds, the emergency services, and specialised service providers working as one to manage the commonest critical medical emergencies - acute coronary events, and stroke.

Annual Turtle Release Goes ‘Swimmingly’

The Cayman Turtle and Conservation and Education Center (CTCEC) staged its Annual Turtle Release on the Governor's Beach, along the Seven Mile Beach on the West Bay Road on Friday, 14th June to a throng of onlookers, who gathered for the event.

This year marks the release of over 36,000 turtles into the wild by the programme, which was started in the 1960's, with over 90 percent of turtles in the wild being related turtles from the programme.

Shona McGill, Education Programmes Officer and Turtle Release Coordinator at the Cayman Turtle Centre noted, "June 16th is considered World Sea Turtle Day around the world, so this is when we raise awareness of the conservation of the species, just how important they are to the marine environment. Green Sea Turtles are really important because they are keystone species...think of that how you lose the game of Jenga: you pull out a block and that makes everything fall apart. That block is the keystone species."

Green Sea Turtles are one of the largest marine herbivores and are considered as the lawnmowers of the ocean, eating seagrass beds to help keep healthy nursery habitats for crustaceans like lobsters and shrimp, protecting us from storm surges and hurricanes, and then also protecting our coral reefs, because where algae grow on coral, it starts to smother them. So, green sea turtles graze on this algae and keep our coral reefs healthy.

"They were actually considered functionally extinct here which means there wasn't enough in the wild to sustain the population. So, we started our release programmes in the 1980s and have seen lots of success. We've released over 30,000 green sea turtles and about 90% of the wild nesting turtles that lay eggs in Cayman are related to our turtles at the Turtle Centre," said Mrs. McGill.

Minister for Tourism, the Honourable Kenneth Bryan told the onlookers that the fact that the turtle release takes place at Governor's Beach each year was and the site was protected as the place where the turtles return to hatch their young meant that it would be protected in perpetuity.

Green sea turtles return to the beach where they were hatched or released for their entire lives.

"Events such as this are so important for awareness, information and education. Without it we cannot do the protections necessary and take the sustainable approach because we have to do this together," said Minister Bryan.

He added that it cannot be just a government effort but one that should involve the community.

"Poaching is a reality. If you educate and inform, the next generation will build policies, legislation and a culture of protection, so this is why it's important.

"Not only that; these releases, allow the turtles to come back and continue laying in the Cayman Islands, so it's mutually beneficial. And it's a great feeling. The release back into the wild is what nature asks us to do. Our guests and visitors who are here today love to see what Cayman is all about because there has been a lot of misconceptions about the Turtle Centre and the more we do, they start to understand it's about education and preservation."

Mr. Bryan said, "If you go back in history, there have been a number of mature turtles that have been released from this location. So, unlike any other location along the beach that does it in its own natural way, at this one there has been a concerted effort, so it would be fair to assume that this beach will for ever and ever have turtles coming back here. I think that it's good for us as a society to acknowledge this because it's not protected in that manner right now, it's protected from a public beach location and it's right next to her Excellency the Governor's home, but at least maybe we should keep that in mind if, God forbid, any other administration tries to do something else, that we know that we have to protect this beach because of what it means for our turtle population preservation and sustainability."

The turtles released on Friday were named Shelly and Martha, with a third turtle being named by one of the spectators. They each weighed between 40 and 60 pounds.

NCC statement on proposed NCA amendments and recent JR

Good afternoon. Given the recent press coverage on matters relating to the work and functioning of the National Conservation Council I wish to make a brief statement before we begin our meeting.

Although the National Conservation Council has not yet been formally or officially consulted on any possible changes to the National Conservation Act, Council wishes to express its grave concerns after the publication of the Cayman News Service article last week which reported details of the alleged amendments. The Council is particularly concerned about some of the possible proposed amendments and what appears to be a misinformation campaign designed to discredit the National Conservation Act and the work of both the National Conservation Council and Department of Environment.

The passage of the NCA in 2013, has enabled the Cayman Islands Government to fulfil its duty under Section 18 of the Bill of Rights in the Cayman Islands Constitution Order which states:

(1) Government shall, in all its decisions, have due regard to the need to foster and protect an environment that is not harmful to the health or well-being of present and future generations, while promoting justifiable economic and social development.

(2) To this end government should adopt reasonable legislative and other measures to protect the heritage and wildlife and the land and sea biodiversity of the Cayman Islands that— (a) limit pollution and ecological degradation; (b) promote conservation and biodiversity; and (c) secure ecologically sustainable development and use of natural resources.

The NCA also enables the Cayman Islands Government to meet its commitments under several international multilateral environmental agreements, including, but not limited to, the Convention on Biological Diversity and the Ramsar Convention on

Wetlands. Additionally, the NCA enables the Cayman Islands Government to fulfil its responsibilities under the Cayman Islands Environment Charter which was signed by the UK Minister for the Overseas Territories and by the Honourable McKeeva Bush, OBE, JP, MP on 26 September 2001. The Environment Charter includes guiding principles and a set of mutual commitments by the UK Government and the Government of the Cayman Islands in respect of integrating environmental conservation into all sectors of policy planning and implementation. Precedent from the Bermuda Courts clarifies that the Environment Charter is in fact a legally binding agreement

In 2012, prior to the passage of the NCA, the UK government commissioned an assessment of environmental protection frameworks in the UK Overseas Territories. The assessment focussed on species, sites, development control and people and a report was produced by The Foundation for International Environmental Law and Development (FIELD) and The Royal Society for the Protection of Birds (RSPB) in February 2013. The results revealed that, along with Pitcairn Islands, the Cayman Islands was the only one of the 16 UKOTs to have been assessed as “WEAK” across all areas. In relation to “development control” the report noted: “Integration of environmental concerns into planning procedures is weak and there are no formal EIA requirements. The draft National Conservation Bill would introduce a formal process for triggering, scoping and conducting EIAs. The development plan for Grand Cayman is from 1997, despite the law requiring review every five years. Other development plans are absent”. In relation to the area of “people” the report stated that “Political accountability for decision-making is limited as is the extent of transparency and consultation.” The report also confirmed that “Enactment of the draft National Conservation Bill was seen as necessary for strengthening environmental governance in all areas other than development control, which required Updating of the Development Plan for Grand Cayman and the creation of Development Plans for Cayman Brac and Little Cayman”.

The various provisions of the NCA are therefore necessary to support and provide for a robust environmental governance framework for the ultimate benefit of the people of the country. All of the provisions of the NCA embody best international practice such as the Act’s use of the precautionary principal which acknowledges the likely significant risk of adverse effects – or the potential for irreversible damage – as reasons to fully consider the environmental implications of all our decisions and plans and to err on the side of caution when all the relevant information is not immediately available.

This is why it is imperative that the competencies and expertise of the Department of Environment continue to be available to assist Council with the proper and efficient discharge of its functions and duties, and that the requirement for the majority of Council members to possess relevant technical or scientific expertise remains a part of the Act. With the passage of the recent rainy weather and the resulting flooding of roads and residential areas, the benefits of making evidence-based decisions to protect human life, property, the economy and the natural environment are hopefully obvious to all. Hopefully it should also be obvious to everyone living in the country, that despite the dire predictions of its detractors, the various provisions of the NCA have not in fact impeded economic growth and development since its passage in 2013. The official government statistics certainly bear this out.

The NCC strongly believes that the NCA is extremely important in our collective efforts to preserve our Caymanian identity and our quality of life. There is a growing body of evidence which shows that a healthy environment which is underpinned by strong legislative protections is a prerequisite for healthy people as well as a healthy economy. The NCC is therefore resolute in its belief that the various provisions of the NCA are absolutely essential for the sustainability and viability of our country now and in the future. Any amendments to the Act which dilute the Council’s ability to act efficiently or that result in poorer conservation outcomes and a sub-standard environmental governance framework for the people and natural environment of the Cayman Islands are ill advised and are therefore strongly discouraged.

Council is also aware that there has been significant public interest in a second judicial review of a recent CPA decision to approve an after-the-fact application for the construction of a road in an environmentally sensitive area in the eastern interior of Grand Cayman. The CPA decision violates the consultation provisions of the NCA, similar to the unlawful decision on the Bogy Sand road proposal which resulted in the Grand Court and Court of Appeal finding in favour of the NCC. Based on legal advice, the NCC filed the Judicial Review as it appears to be the only legal way to have the unlawful CPA decision quashed and reverted to them for proper consultation under the NCA and in accordance with the recent Court of Appeal judgment. As one of the parties to the Judicial Review there is nothing which can be said that is not already a matter of the public record, other than it remains our hope that a negotiated rather than litigated resolution can be achieved between the parties.

Thank you for time and attention.

JTC TO ACQUIRE SPECIALIST FIDUCIARY BUSINESS FFP, CAYMAN ISLANDS, BVI AND DUBAI

JTC, the global professional services business, is pleased to announce the acquisition of FFP, a leading provider of specialist fiduciary services to fund, trust and corporate clients. Completion is subject to regulatory approvals.

Founded in 2012, FFP is privately owned and headquartered in the Cayman Islands, with further offices in the BVI and Dubai. The business provides a range of specialist fiduciary, restructuring, trustee, fund administration and corporate services to clients across the globe, with a focus on complex engagements. FFP has established a strong reputation and differentiates itself as a leader in its chosen markets through a focus on providing innovative and tailored solutions, drawing on the unique multi-disciplinary skill set of its experienced and highly regarded team.

JTC's Commercial Office has been actively working on the establishment of a Governance Service practice. The acquisition of FFP forms part of this strategic initiative focused on the provision of a suite of specialist services designed to ensure effective management, oversight and decision-making within the Group's client base.

The acquisition enhances the range of services JTC can offer to existing and new clients, serving to expand the Group's overall addressable market. FFP has particular expertise in resolving situations that require practitioners with specific restructuring or insolvency experience. These mandates often require longer term provision of complementary corporate or fund services for the associated vehicles.

The Cayman Islands is one of the leading global financial jurisdictions for the funds and trust markets. JTC first established a presence in the Cayman Islands in 2013 and is already one of the leading professional services firms in the jurisdiction. Post acquisition, the Group will be represented by an enlarged team of over 80 professionals and will be differentiated in the market through its unique range of services, delivered to a diverse and growing book of institutional and private clients.

The combination will allow FFP to leverage JTC's well-invested infrastructure and global network, which includes the largest and most sophisticated jurisdictions for the funds and trust markets. This will accelerate geographic expansion beyond FFP's current footprint to capture demand for its specialist services.

The entire FFP team, including the founders and senior management, will remain with JTC post acquisition. The senior leaders of FFP all have 15+ years of experience in handling complex fund and trust situations and are supported by a highly qualified team of practitioners with a complementary range of skill sets across the funds, trust and corporate services space. All employees will become owners of JTC through its unique 'ownership for all' programme.

Nigel Le Quesne, CEO of JTC, said:

"We are excited to welcome the whole FFP team to the JTC family. FFP has an excellent reputation and significant subject matter expertise with strength in depth across the team. We believe that access to JTC's global platform will accelerate FFP's growth prospects with substantial opportunities across the Group as we develop our Governance Services business line. The combination of our businesses will cement our leading position in the Cayman Islands, which is one of the pre-eminent financial jurisdictions globally. As always, cultural alignment is key and, like JTC, FFP consistently invests in its people and capabilities."

Michael Pearson, Co-Founder and Partner of FFP, said:

"We are really grateful for the support of our team, clients and legal contacts who have championed us over the last decade. With their backing, FFP has been able to help lead and change the way stakeholders approach complex and demanding situations in our markets. The speed of change and increasing globalisation of financial services means that well-invested infrastructure and a broad network are increasingly important. Joining the JTC Group provides us with access to a global platform that encompasses all key financial centres and we are relishing the prospects and opportunities this creates. That Nigel and team have astutely developed and led JTC for over 30 years was a very important factor for us in coming on-board."

345FC shines at Rood-Wit International U10 Tournament

► Jake vs PSV

► Lawrence vs Club Brugge

Cayman Islands-based 345FC recently competed at the Rood-Wit International Under-10 Soccer Tournament in the Netherlands, dropping only a single tournament match in a field that featured some of the best academy teams in the world.

Cayman finished 17th overall at the tournament, taking four wins, six draws and one loss.

“Competing and earning wins in a tournament of this magnitude - where we face professional club academies - is a significant achievement,” 345FC coach Peter Reijn said.

“Coming from a grassroots environment on a relatively small island in which we cannot select from a larger pool of children, we showed again to be very competitive with the European top academies, not just defending but also playing dominant and showing our skills. It was an invaluable experience for our players.”

Cayman opened group stage play with a 2-2 draw with Club Brugge, where the first team are Belgium champions. Other notable group stage matches included a scoreless draw with PSV Eindhoven - whose first team are Dutch champions - as well as 1-1 draws with Scottish power Aberdeen FC and perennial Dutch contender FC Nordsjælland.

Following the group stage, 345FC picked up wins against United States-based East-Side FC, South African side Hola Skoko and FC Utrecht before beating Royal Antwerp FC - where the first team competed in the UEFA Champions League this season - 4-0 to claim 17th place.

“At this age group, this is one of the best tournaments in the world,” Reijn said. “Individually, we are looking forward to seeing some of these boys developing on and following in the pathways of our players currently playing in the European Academy set up.”

This marked 345 FC’s fourth time at the tournament. In 2019, the team finished 21st before taking eighth in 2022 and fifth place last year.

“Our expectations have risen so much, a 17th-place finish feels like we could have done better, which is a testament to how far we’ve come,” Reijn said.

The 345FC players played a handful of international friendlies prior to the tournament, beating academy teams from historic Eredivisie club Sparta Rotterdam, NAC Breda and Hola Skoko and falling to the academy team from Dutch KNVB Cup winners Feyenoord Rotterdam.

ELECTRIC CARS FOR CUBA: ALUM EARNS A+ IN TRADE DIPLOMACY

► John Felder with the Tesla he exported to Cuba

► Cuban Tesla owners William and Jessica Rodriguez with John Felder

► Documentary film producers Peter and Pamela McNeil in Cuba with John Felder (Center)

When the white Tesla Model Y rolled onto the dock at Mariel Port in Cuba, it marked a historic moment in international trade, in the auto industry and, to some degree, in U.S.-Cuba diplomacy. The headline-grabbing moment would never have happened without the perseverance and vision of University of Maryland Global Campus (UMGC) alumnus John Felder.

The license that allowed Felder to export a U.S.-made electric car to private citizens in Cuba is the first such permit since the U.S. embargo was launched more than six decades ago. People who know Felder, the owner of Premier Automotive Export in Maryland, cited his temperament, patience and salesmanship as reasons for his success.

"John's magnetic personality is infectious. He is one of the most influential people I have ever met," said film producer Peter McNeil who, with his wife Pamela, operates A Brighter Path Productions in North Carolina. Captivated by the story of the Cuba-bound Tesla, the McNeils made Driving Towards Change, a film documenting Felder's initiative.

As part of UMGC's African American History Month activities, the university is streaming Driving Towards Change on Thursday, Feb. 29. Felder and the McNeils will speak after the screening. While the original film had only been publicly shown twice before—at a red carpet documentary premiere in Columbia, Maryland, in August and at an event in Cuba, the UMGC screening includes additional footage of the Tesla completing its journey from Jacksonville, Florida, to Mariel Port just west of Havana.

Register here to see the 47-minute movie and post-film discussion.

Felder long has believed in the immense potential for electric cars and solar power in the Caribbean, especially in Cuba where the existing power grid is unreliable yet there is abundant sunshine. As Cuba moves away from Venezuelan oil imports, it has turned its eye toward wind and solar power. The Cuban government's strategic plan includes greater solar energy capacity.

Felder has partnered with Advanced Solar Products in New Jersey to install 50 charging stations in Cuba. In addition to electric cars, he is also authorized to export electric scooters to Cuba, calling his Bala brand scooters "the safest in the world." But getting permission to export directly from the United States to the island - as Felder has with the Bahamas, Barbados and the Cayman Islands - was no easy sell.

The self-described "gearhead" spent more than 15 years negotiating with government officials in both the United States and Cuba, in addition to juggling the logistics for shipping vehicles and getting paid.

"It's difficult to operate in Cuba, even worse for an American company because of the embargo," Felder acknowledged. "For my company to become the first to bring electric vehicles to the island, I had to get both the Cuban government and the U.S. government to say 'yes.' I had to get two adversaries to agree."

There were numerous caveats to the sale, including a promise that the cars would only be sold to private citizens and never resold to the Cuban government. The buyers of the first Tesla were William and Jessica Rodriguez, who own a Cuban restaurant in Burtonsville, Maryland, but also have family property on the island.

While the Tesla is the first electric vehicle to reach a private citizen in Cuba, Felder legally navigated the trade embargo to sell a Nissan Leaf to the Embassy of Guyana in Havana in 2017. That deal came under a limited four-year license from the U.S. Department of Commerce's Bureau of Industry and Security and involved Premier Automotive Export's subsidiary in the Cayman Islands. The license only permitted sales to embassies.

Felder said the embassy is still using the car and "they have not had to stand in a gas line in Cuba for seven years." He is now negotiating a Tesla sale with the Egyptian Embassy in Cuba. A technician with Premier Automotive Export's operations is available to travel to Cuba, if needed, to handle maintenance and repairs on the electric cars.

Felder said the Cuba adventure is the pinnacle of a lifelong love affair with cars. "I'm a car guy. I've always had a passion for cars, from the time I was a little boy," he said. "When I was younger, I wanted to drive a stock car."

That fascination with cars carried him into a 25-year career with Chrysler Corp. Felder was a mid-Atlantic region sales and marketing executive before retiring from the automaker in 2002 and launching his luxury car dealership. Though based in Columbia, Maryland, he immediately saw the potential for sales beyond the United States.

"I did an assessment of markets and started delivering to the Bahamas, Barbados and Grand Cayman," he explained. "Then I started looking at Cuba and the embargo and all the old cars they still had on the island, cars with no catalytic converters, cars that pollute.

"Cuba has 11.5 million people and about 5 percent of that population can afford to write a check for an electric car. They are part of the middle class. They are the target I want to connect to," he added.

In 2012, after the Obama administration signaled a softening in the Cold War-era relationship with Cuba, Felder received an invitation to meet in D.C. with officials of the U.S. Department of Energy and Cuba's Ministry of Energy.

"That absolutely threw me. I had no idea what the invitation was about. But as soon as I got there, it became apparent they wanted to talk about electric cars," Felder said, explaining that his car sales elsewhere in the Caribbean had put him on the radar of both countries. "It was an enlightening conversation, and I was invited to Cuba."

Once in Havana, Felder was mesmerized by the old American cars that Cuban drivers kept running through sheer resourcefulness. "I knew about them, of course, but for a car guy like me to actually see a Studebaker or an old Edsel still on the road was unbelievable," he said.

Felder said he is thrilled the film of the electric cars initiative will be shown by UMGC, where he earned a bachelor's degree in business at the urging of his oldest daughter, who was a college student at the time. As a military veteran, he had long known about UMGC.

Felder had started his college career in pre-med at North Carolina Central University but decided that medicine wasn't a good fit and left school. His daughter challenged him to become a Y2K graduate in tandem with her.

"I was still working for Chrysler and there was the demand of going back to college when I was 50-something. I was the oldest person in my class," Felder said. He attended in-person classes in the evenings on Mondays and Wednesdays and all day on Saturdays, and he completed the degree requirements in two years.

He said the makeup of the class was diverse, and the dynamic in-classroom discussions "were a big part of my life experience."

And Felder's connection with the McNeils? Pure serendipity.

The McNeils learned of Felder's Cuba plans when they were working out details for filming the national convention of the African American Postal League - A-Plus, for short - a national organization focused on Black postal employees. Along with the filming, the McNeils were going to serve as vendors at the convention to sell their novel Duology of Postal and to promote their feature film, Urge, which turned a thoughtful lens on a couple dealing with the fallout from pornography addiction.

During talks with Camille Wilder, the A-Plus vice president of retirees mentioned Felder - a friend of hers - and his Cuba project. It wasn't long before the McNeils were asked to film Felder's efforts.

"This golden opportunity was staring us in the face and, after Pam and I had a conversation, we accepted. We had to quickly put the promotion of Urge on the backburner because we were headed to Cuba!" Peter McNeil said.

Although they eventually jumped on board, the filmmakers' initial reaction had been hesitation.

"Who goes to Cuba? Not too many people we know. That's why we weren't lured onto this project right away," Pamela McNeil said. "But then we met John, who is loveable and generous and made us feel like family. That sealed the deal."

The McNeils intended to make short videos that could be used as promotional spots or trailers focused on Felder's undertaking. It didn't take long, however, to see the potential for a documentary film. In addition to interviewing U.S. government officials and Felder's friends and colleagues in the United States, the McNeils traveled twice to Cuba, where they, too, were amazed by the old autos on the road.

"Those classic retro cars are beautiful. But they have no air conditioning. They're rickety and raggedy inside," Pamela McNeil said. "There were times we were in a car that had to pull off and sit at the side of the road because they overheated."

They also got to experience one of Cuba's iconic gas station lines when they waited an hour and 15 minutes to reach a pump so their driver could fill up the car's tank. But they also praised the creativity and energy and friendliness of the Cubans they met.

Pamela McNeil said the moment the island was waiting for, the arrival of the Tesla, felt surreal.

"You have a generation of young people that all they've known are retro cars," she said. "That Tesla—it's something Cubans never would have imagined they'd see in their lifetimes."

Lose belly fat faster than ever

Have you ever looked in the mirror and wished that you could make your belly fat vanish before your eyes? Unattractive fat around the stomach is one of the most common body frustrations that my new clients complain about.

No one wants a squishy stomach! Frustrating as it is, losing body fat is a slow and steady process, rather than an instantaneous fix.

However, I do have an extremely effective method for losing belly fat faster than ever, and I'd like to share it with you today...

The Two-Pronged Approach to Rapid Fat Loss. This effective, fat-melting method attacks fat simultaneously on two separate fronts for maximum effectiveness: your sugar intake and your high intensity workouts.

Prong #1: This part of the strategy requires zero extra effort on your part! In fact, all you have to do is STOP doing something that you're already doing! You stop eating harmful, refined sugar, in all its forms. This means no sodas, no desserts, no packaged snacks, no candy, no mocha lattes, NO SUGAR AT ALL!

Stop and consider the food that you eat in an average day. Focus primarily on the items you habitually eat that contain sugar. It may be shocking to find out how much refined sugar you actually consume. Eating sugar is the fastest way to gain weight, so it makes sense that eliminating sugar is the smartest way to start your rapid fat loss.

Do not, however, starve yourself of healthy calories. Fill your diet with lean meats, vegetables, nuts and seeds as you cut out the refined sugar. Keep your metabolism high by fueling up on high protein, high fiber, low carb, and zero sugar foods whenever hunger strikes.

Prong #2: Here's the part of the strategy that requires some effort, but trust me when I say it's worth it. Crank up the intensity of your workouts to a whole new level.

Most people take exercise on with the slow and steady mentality - moving, pushing and pulling as little as possible while still "getting the job done". I've got some news for you...if you still have belly fat to lose then the job wasn't getting done.

If you can comfortably hold a conversation, hardly break a sweat or feel the same when it's over as you did when it began, then you're simply not pushing yourself hard enough while you exercise.

Increasing the intensity of your workouts requires focused intent. You must go into the session with the goal of pushing your body to the limit. Remember, it's a contained timeframe that will be over shortly, so bear down and deal with the discomfort. With practice you will learn to embrace the burn.

► Ernest Ebanks

The safest and most effective way to crank up the intensity and effectiveness of your exercise time is to work with a qualified fitness professional, such as myself. I would love to hear from you!

Call Ernest at Body Shapers Personal Training Fitness Studio 325-8696 or email bodyshaperscayman@gmail.com today and together we will get you started on your fastest fat loss ever!
